

Man's blest no doubt who walks not out in wicked men's affairs;
And stands no day in sinners' way, not sits in scorers' chairs.
But holds e'en still God's law in will with all his heart's delight;
And will him use on it to muse, to keep it day and night.

He like shall be the planted tree, nigh set the river's course,
Which fruit in tide, whose leaves abide; all prospers what he does.
Not so, not so the wicked do; like dust or chaff they be;
Uphoist by wind, as light by kind from face of earth to see.

Therefore, these men, so wicked then, in judgment shall not stand;
Nor sinners be in company of righteous men of hand.
The Lord doth know and will avow men's ways that are of God;
Where shall decay the beaten way of wicked men so broad.

(Psalm 1, metrified by Archbishop Matthew Parker, 1560)
